Making Oneself Rich in the Sight of God

A wealthy American textile buyer attended a business lunch in Seoul, Korea, and spoke through a translator to a large group of prospective sellers. At one point he told a rather long but amusing anecdote. His translator said a few words in Korean to the listeners, who immediately laughed loudly and applauded. Afterwards the businessman met a colleague of his who had been seated at the back of the auditorium. This man had some grasp of the Korean language so the businessman asked him how he thought the talk had gone. 'Very well,' the colleague said. 'One thing puzzled me,' the businessman said. 'How did the translator reduce my story to a few words?' 'He didn't tell your story,' the colleague said. 'He merely said, "The rich American with the big chequebook has just told a funny story so respond appropriately!"'

What is it about wealth that encourages such deference towards the rich? The psychiatrist, Karl Menninger, says that in his experience wealth is a recipe for anxiety and other illnesses if it is not combined with a generous spirit and a desire to help the underprivileged.
